

Campion Hall Academic Subjects

The life of the Hall is dominated by an intellectual commitment to the humanum, that is, to propelling everything that might help human beings and humanity as such to flourish in the future.

Those disciplines currently taught and researched in the University that may strengthen the humanum include:

Archaeology and Anthropology
Biodiversity, Conservation, and Management
Comparative Philology and General Linguistics
Comparative Religion
Development Studies
Digital Scholarship and Digital Humanities
Economics for Development
Geography and the Environment
Greek and Latin Languages and Literature
History
History of Art and Visual Culture
International Development
Judaism and Christianity in the Graeco-Roman World
Linguistics, Philology, and Phonetics
Oriental Studies
Philosophy
Philosophical Theology
Politics and International Relations
Refugee and Forced Migration Studies
Social Policy and Intervention
Sociology
Theology and Religion
Water Science Policy and Management

This list is not exhaustive and we are willing consider postgraduate applications from any of the four divisions of the University.